It is a challenging time for law enforcement agencies with more demands being placed on services, decreasing budgets, and tighter scrutiny on virtually every aspect of law enforcement from budgets to body cameras to the perceived militarization of law enforcement agencies. LEASE was created to help solve some of those issues by removing the need for capital outlay required to update and refresh airborne law enforcement units. LEASE is an innovative approach to gain the latest equipment and the expertise to utilize it. It allows agencies a method to train the airborne crew as a team in a controlled environment maximizing the effectiveness of the airborne tool. Reimagine law enforcement aviation. And now, the LEASE TH-67 program allows agencies to upgrade their aircraft to the latest law enforcement equipment.

“This unique approach to airborne law enforcement allows agencies to stay on the cutting edge of technology with no capital costs” -Dr. Gordon Jiroux, CEO

Whether you are an agency just starting out or an agency who is growing, LEASE can help.

An airborne law enforcement unit is a tremendous tool and studies have demonstrated how important that tool can be. It increases the effectiveness of officers on the ground. It reduces the amount of time required to search for suspects or missing persons. It increases safety during vehicle pursuits. Airborne law enforcement does many things to improve an agency. The reality is that purchasing an aircraft and equipping that aircraft with state-of-the-art equipment is a major decision by most agencies. It is a decision that often draws the attention of ownership from members within a department and the local community. The money for the purchase of the aircraft often must come from the same pool of funds that purchases vehicles, is used for construction of new administrative offices or goes towards the purchase of a new SWAT van. LEASE solves the funding problem. Most agencies are allowed to use a fraction of the funds needed to purchase the aircraft and those funds come from a pool of money already allotted to the agency. Let us show you how to Reimagine Law Enforcement Aviation.

Have you heard about our HOTSHOT™ program?

Airborne law enforcement units are high profile members of their parent agency. LEASE understands that this high value asset cannot be sitting on the ground when it is needed in the air. To help solve this, LEASE has created the HOTSHOT™ maintenance program. If you select this level of support and your aircraft goes down for maintenance, LEASE can rapidly dispatch an expert and get your aircraft back in the air.
